If we don't protect Antarctica from tourism, there may be serious consequences for us all. The ice of Antarctica holds 70 percent of the world's fresh water. If this ice melts, ocean levels could rise 200 feet and flood the coastal cities of the Earth. Also, the continent's vast fields of ice provide natural air conditioning for our planet. They keep Earth from getting too hot as they reflect sunlight back into space. Clearly, Antarctica should remain a place for careful and controlled scientific research. We cannot allow tourism to bring possible danger to the planet. The only way to protect this fragile and important part of the planet is to stop tourists from traveling to Antarctica.

- ① If we stop tourism in Antarctica, there may be consequences for tour companies.
- ② The writer wants Antarctica to be banned from scientific research.
- ③ The ice of Antarctica attracts sunlight and heats the Earth.
- ④ Our excessive visits to Antarctica will harm it and then our planet.
