p. 133	main idea	The practical necessity of the vehicle to handle two children, their parents, the grandparent, and paraphernalia caused the narrator to buy a minivan, which she and her husband had refused.	The demands of a growing family led the narrator to buy a minivan. 또는 The practical utility of the vehicle led(drew) the narrator to buy a minivan.
p. 141	summary	The narrator and her family have had many problems due to her unemployment.	The narrator's unemployment causes a lot of problems for the narrator and her family. First, it creates financial problems such as affording a lower quality of groceries, less money for clothing, difficulties of rental payment and tuition. Second, the narrator suffers from psychological problems such as depression and confusion. Finally, government bureaucracy makes the narrator frustrated.
p. 168	모범답안	American children tend to be active and independent and focused on technology while Italian children depend more on their parents and grandparents but are more focused on culture.	There are some differences between Italian children and American children. American children are independent and focus on technology while Italian kids are dependent on their parents and focus on culture.
p. 169	summary	While working at a school in Milan, the writer noticed some important differences between Italian	There are some important differences between Italian children and American children in several

p. 303	summary	Everything about the house where the narrator is currently living is clean and in perfect order, both indoors and outside in the yard, but it has a cold atmosphere that is uninviting. Although the writer thinks and reads in the quiet of her room, she does not like it there and is planning to escape.	The house where the narrator is currently living is clean yet too austere and uninviting, reflecting the character of its owner. Inside everything is spotless and shines, with a cleanliness and lack of color that is oddly featureless. The order and cleanliness gives an impression that is cold and unwelcoming. Attributing to this impression is the uncomfortable and harsh furniture. Although the writer thinks and reads in the quiet of her room, she does not like it there and is planning to escape.

		womea, to be more communicative, because of the lack of intensity and the challenging nature of technology.	communication among men.
p. 332	summary	The use of email helped create deeper communication with men who previously were not talkative face-to-face, revealing how the male gender perceives discomfort in direct communication. The nature of computers is engaging to men because they resist domination, which is the crux of the male value system.	The nature of email can evoke more open communication among men. The writer formed a deep bond with his office neighbor, over email rather than in talking due to technological enjoyment and the lessened intensity of writing. Men tend to have a deeper interest in facing the challenges of a computer, while women, who value cooperation, tend to find this unappealing.
p. 337	Main Idea	paragraph 1 : All of the images at the beginning of the show relax and assure the audience that Oprah is a kind, caring, fun-loving individual who really is "real." paragraph 2 : When Oprah first appears, she sets the stage and the mood for what is to come.	Oprah's show presents herself as real and friendly as she gives her thoughts and talks with both celebrity and inspiring guests.
p. 337	summary	Every day, the Oprah show begins with images that establish Oprah as a kind, caring, person genuine. The content of the show that follows is either a celebrity or regular guest or some helpful advice on a given topic.	Oprah's show presents herself as real and friendly as she gives her thoughts and talks with both celebrity and inspiring guests. p. 405	Main Idea	Relaying others' malicious remarks about someone to him can be an act of dubious kindness. The way people deal with hostile gossip reveals something about their character	The manner in which one relays malicious remarks, which are sometimes useful, is often damaging and counter-productive and reveals more about the messenger than the target.

p. 405	summary	You can learn about people's character on the basis of their handling of hostile gossip, such as whether or not they unnecessarily pass it on in order to secure their likability and erode the reputation of others. Often the gossip is presented in a mock-objective manner, which is just as damaging, despite seeming well-meaning.	The manner in which one relays malicious remarks is often damaging and counter-productive and reveals more about the messenger than the target. Only hostile remarks that are relevant to assessment on those one has to rely on are directly useful. Often the gossip is presented in a mock-objective manner, which is just as damaging, despite seeming well-meaning.
